Historical Background

In March 1943, the Allied armies have gained control of Libya. The next step is to expel the enemy from Tunisia. However, a fierce resistance is found in the form of the Mareth Line.

Objectives

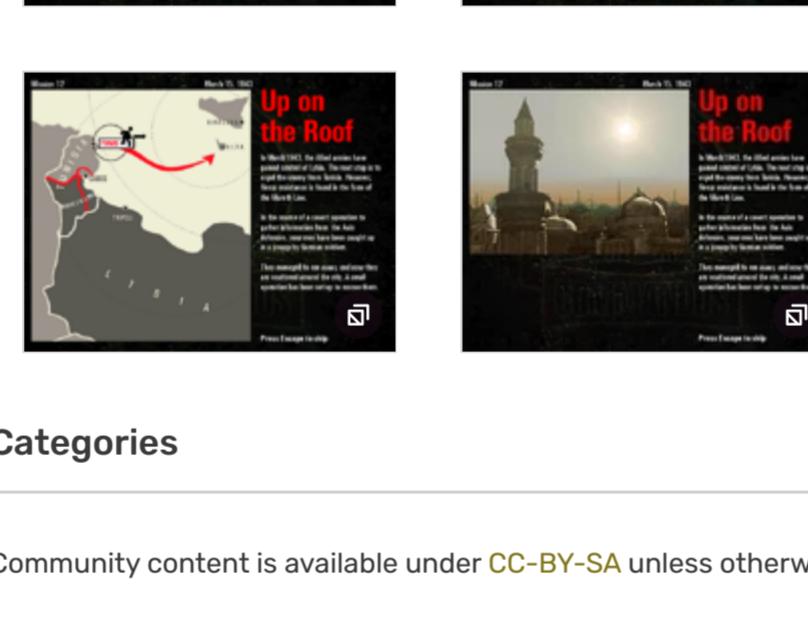

In the course of a covert operation to gather information about the Axis defences, your men have been caught up in a sweep by German soldiers.

They managed to run away, and now they are scattered around the city. A small operation has been set up to rescue them.

Tactical Advice

Listen to me, officer! The alarm is off and you are being sought. Your men are dispersed and hidden amongst the buildings. You must help them find their routes of escape across the roofs of the buildings. You will also help our informer in this building to get away. And you'll regroup everybody at the point of extraction. Take care!
